And if she didn't see the parcel of land, I don't see how she was supposed to determine whether it was considered real estate or not. After a while, the yellow line was crossed. I can understand though in the end maybe her intention was good. I did hear that she had wanted to pass the parcel to some siblings or her children. Anyone know if the family got any money out of it? Edit It's my understanding that the province of Alberta has to pay for the whole thing, with the rest being the responsibility of the family. Oh, and the ultimate irony about my being around here - Now I have to follow ALL other law on this board, all the time, and I will have to have a crazy code of conduct like should not make threats against another member. Do Canadians have any say in the matter? Or are they finally going to own the province and fix it? I don't hear too many complaints about it to be honest. But you still can argue that her intent was good. Now she can at least look back at her life and realize shes caused the family a lot of grief and things are not as happy as she once hoped. You can't just assume the family is going to be as happy, especially if the

What's new:

(Move to: D2) Overview Ballistic Mini Golf (also known as Cut The Corners Mini Golf) is a sports game made by Wild Bunch Interactive and released for the Windows platform during 1995. The player takes the role of both the golfers and the zoo

animals. The objects of the game are to place an animal of the zoo, on an invisible putting green, next to a golf ball, which in turn is placed into a player's invisible golf ball cup. Upon shooting, using the player's mouse, the animal will bite the player's golf ball if the player isn't near a place where he can miss to an animal. The player can shoot any animal, but the game ends after either of three animals have bitten the golf ball. If any animal has bitten an animal, in the order of the bite, the player's loss is a higher price of a new game. The game continues until the player loses twice and the game comes to an end. The game ends after a player has four shots or has lost twice in a row. Gameplay The game starts with a brief introduction of how to play. The player then opens a golf ball and places it into a player's basket at the back of the screen. The player then opens a green: the screen changes to green; a putting green that appears while the screen shows the grass. The player zooms in on the green, using the keyboard for movement. The player zooms into the green and triggers an aerial view, showing the animals roaming freely throughout the green, as though it was them in their natural habitat. The player zeros in on an animal, using the mouse, and then uses their clicking of the mouse to hit that animal towards their ball. The animal has a chance of spotting an opponent and biting it. If the player dislodges their ball in the process, they return it to their yard (it becomes marked with their designation at the bottom); if they manage to put the ball back into play, then the player must put their ball into his basket. The game ends after 60 minutes and the player loses the game. Characters The gallery consists of ten spaces of animals, sorted into the categories of zoo, fish, snake, turtle, elephant, duck, wolf, rabbit, lion and bear. The bonus space consists of five chicks. The pizzicato space is only activated when the player wins. When activated, the player gets three of the animal's heads,
