Microsoft has been holding a Public Preview of the new Windows 10 Mobile build for a while now, now that we've finally seen the complete version, we can take a closer look at just how far it has come. If you're still on Windows Phone 8.1, you will see a switch to Windows 10 in the Windows Phone section of your Settings app on your phone. If you find yourself in the Windows section of your phone, you will probably see the Windows 10 section as well, as the Windows 10 Mobile build is at version 10586. The Windows 10 Mobile build is said to contain several UI and performance improvements, but the most important of them might be the new Pixels. In theory, this should bring the Pixel experience to the rest of Windows Phone users, which will be a welcome change to those of you who are still holding out for something better. When Windows 10 Mobile was first announced, many people were excited to get their hands on the new OS, but after a few months of testing, we all know that this was never going to happen. As someone who has been using an LG Optimus 5x alongside Windows 10 Mobile, I can tell you first hand that it feels good, this feels like a real upgrade, and I can't wait to finally have my hands on a real Windows Phone running the Windows 10 Mobile update. It has been said that the new Pixels are rumored to be sold out by the holiday season, in all likelihood, the Lumia 550 could have a trick up its sleeve at that time. So if your phone is still running Windows Phone 8.1, you might want to save up some money and hold out a little longer. Share This Post:I may be wrong, but I don't think that there's anything wrong with me. It's the common assumption that Americans are driven to pursue happiness. That Americans are happy because of what they do. I get emails asking for more, "how do I have more purpose?" Purpose is a word that gets thrown around all the time. It's a "spiritual" word. e79caf774b each including a tubular body having a fluid passageway extending through the body for fluid transmission between the coupling members and a pair of sealing means, such as expandable sealing rings, for sealing the body around the passageway and a tubular annular seal for locating the sealing means in sealing engagement with the coupling members and maintaining the sealing means in sealing engagement with the coupling members. In order to attain a continuous, leak proof sealing engagement between such coupling members, normally at least one of the sealing means includes a soft, deformable material such as rubber while the other sealing means is formed of a relatively rigid material, normally metal such as steel. In the case of expandable sealing rings, it is known to provide a draw ring, which is drawn into the passageway of the coupling member in which the sealing ring is installed, such that the sealing ring expands and engages the interior surface of the passageway and the coupling member, the expandable ring being disposed in sealing engagement with the passageway and the coupling member. The axially movable draw ring is normally held in its normally retracted or stored position in surrounding relation to the sealing ring by a flexible retaining member such as a spring. When it is desired to install a coupling member or uncouple the same, a manually operable tool is used to axially move the draw ring into engagement with the sealing ring. The expansion of the sealing ring causes the seal to engage the interior wall of the passageway and the Making our largest investment - NateOsman ====== NateOsman I've been working on a new product and today I finally finished it (I started it in May 2017 but never announced it here). The business has now raised $7.5M and is on track to make our largest investment. Related Articles Computing the other side of the Linux bridge -- the 'other' side of a containerized, virtualized network -- can be difficult. In today's article, we'll walk through how to get your containers and virtual machines talking and share what we've learned along the way. If you don't already have Container Networking in Google Kubernetes Engine (CNI) enabled, you'll need to start by setting up something like Kubernetes to continue with our walkthrough. Starting point In our case, we'll be using Google Kubernetes Engine (GKE) and four Google Compute Engine (GCE) virtual machines to showcase a single Linux bridge and, the container ports that are mapped to that bridge. To get started, you'll need to create two virtual machines on GCE. The first is your CNI provider. In this case, we'll use Heptio Contrail. The second is a CNI provider on its own. It will be used to represent the various containers. In this article, we'll be using CRI-O to represent the containers. Right now, all our containers are running in a single namespace, but they are being deployed into separate pods (kinds of containers). The CNI provider for Contrail will tell the Contrail VM what interface to use to talk to the CRI-O provider to get to the containers in the corresponding pods. One of the biggest questions for anyone getting into this is how to tell what bridge you need to use. Unfortunately, this is not something we can configure. The virtual machines also have a static IP address for the interface they're using. So, unless you plan to change your IP address for the CNI provider, you'll need to ensure you
