What's new in HOT WHEELS™ - Mattel Dream Mobile™:

I dream she smiles at me in the quiet. She holds me in the warmth at night. I hide in her shadow's light. I wait for her footsteps to bring me good? In her words I drink her blood. I dream the rain falls full on earth. And I quietly bleat for blueberry pie. 2 comments: Hello My Dream Rose. I love this poem. I'm just wondering how this poem might have changed a few hundred years ago? The refrain seems to remain the same, and is almost the same in a way that it was in some of Shakespeare's plays that I have read. I think at the end of the day, it's great that she loves me, and I want her to because, I'm great. Thanks for the poem. Thanks! I'm still learning how I want to show my gratitude and my love to people, as I imagine those two reactions seem so often like a 0-to-100 kind of thing. I like how you said there's nothing deeper to it, there's just a quick thought about that phrase in my head, and then it changes to something else. Because, it's deep, that's just where I am right now. This poem is a bit Daffy's style, and I feel like I'm beginning my understanding of more of what and how and when he is in elements of it. By which I'm referring to him specifically, I think also that I learn how and when poets like him are in their poems and call them other names, and I guess you could say Lola and I are deciding where our own uniqueness comes from and begins to bleed into all three of us in a symbiotic sort of way. Also, I don't quite understand the "right now" thing that you just said. I wonder if I'm representing some greater understanding of your message with this, but I also wonder if my own lack of understanding of you even commenting here is a testament to how new I am in communicating with you. I was thinking about this for a bit after I left the house. I lost a best friend to cancer at 16 and she's my woman who most people didn't even know. She was a great friend. She really was. She is the one that told me I don't hate my parents, but I don't like them either. We live in the moment now, but I am learning to let go a little and

Q: How can I help my depressed sister better? My sister is extremely depressed but she is not able to deal with it herself. She is also not interested in talking to anyone about it and in fact mostly keeps her feelings to herself. When she is not complaining about having to live with us or our parents our parents treat her like she's 17. She is only four years younger than I am. I'd love to know what can I do to help her and cure the pain she's in right now. We live in a pretty remote area where she has no friends and also stays away from socialising so it's difficult. She goes to the same schools as I did and I have taken her to the doctor for a few times but nothing was really going through. Edit: I'd like to get advice on how I can help her. She's found her way to the internet now and finds it very lonely and disturbing. She has recently been discovered on Twitter but has no way to talk to anyone besides me and our parents. A: If she is only four years younger than you, by all rights she should be treated like a sibling, even if it's in name only. You need to communicate that you and she are getting old enough and have been passing time together well enough to be friends/siblings first and
