Pinball Champ 2018 is a table that appeared in the first Blackbelt arcade game for Taito in 2016. It is the sixth Taito arcade pinball machine to be released after the series reboot in 2018. Blackbelt is a fan-favorite table among competitive players as it is one of the first table to increase the intensity in the gameplay to a pace that was never seen before. The table is also one of the first to feature an eject hole. The table features an intense, skill-based gameplay that is unique among Taito Pinball machines.

Scoring Strategy

1. Eject: A ball ejecting will force you to immediately press the power to cause your shot to bounce off the left back wall. You can see the ball travel left to right as it bounces off the back wall. In this mode of play, you will want to practice a lob shot as it can ensure that you get the ball to bounce left to right.
2. Drop: A ball dropping from a high route on the playfield will earn you several points of course! You can perform a shot to knock the ball off the playfield and into one of the three drop targets. You can wait until the ball is about to roll in to make your shot and score, or you can prevent the ball from rolling into a target by knocking the ball into the drop target. There is a ball receiver sensor at the top of the back wall and the drop targets are on the left and right side of the playfield near the ball receiver sensor. There are three drop targets in this mode of play and you can score between 1 and 4 depending on where the ball lands.
3. Wild: Wild Balls are balls that are randomly assigned a wild color. They will be added to the playfield at various times when there is a line available. You will want to wait for balls that are in a wild color to activate a special line, or else, the wild balls will not be assigned a special rule.
4. Spot Target: If the spot ball was hit, a player will receive a point between 1 and 4. In this mode of play, you will want to practice your lob shot by quickly hitting the spots once they appear to get them to instantly activate the line for your ball. You can also practice your drop shot by aiming to knock the ball off the playfield and into one of the three drop targets.

What's new:

The latest Sam Mendes' bouncing baby, Siberian Snows, is one of the best things to come out of the absolutely, unquestionably very good and important game reboot after Doom. Russ Pitts has a go at it, but ultimately decides against it. We make that choice easier. Major Points There is nothing not to like about the game. It oozes warmth, style, and style. It doesn't really bother about realism (as well as it could, but who wants that anyway?). It's purely a crisp and clever exercise in slick presentation. The stealth is a purr. But it has something else going on - this is a great adventure game. Too many stealth games fall apart in repetitive gaming. They allow the player to be at the mercy of what they are doing and however they can manage it, while the enemies are obviously doing something else and so there is an expectation that you can always do something to escape from their detection. That game designer wasn't thinking very hard when he came up with that stuff, because he realized that it would never work in practice, and so it doesn't. You never feel like you know what to do and so the stealth comes second to being somewhere else. In fact, the contrary is true - the stealth works far better if you do the other thing and have a calculated plan to make your way somewhere safe. The thing with Sam Mendes' game is that it's designed for exactly this situation. The enemies don't seem to notice you, and the location you are trying to sneak into is as safe as can be from any of them. They spend their time roaming around and not checking corners and no one is certain where you might be or what you might be doing. It's almost like playing Whitemarsh Haunted Mansion or something. Except that it's brilliant. In fact, the Silent Hill model of being almost entirely on rails with only one encounter at the end of it is something to raise a cork to if that can be done well. The combat is similarly just like a brisk hiking trip - it's a big bonus that you can also sneak to things that you want to find out more about, and a big knock about it that you can therefore hide from the bad guys and keep going. It's also often massively damaging to someone - you can, in fact, kill someone by tossing a pel
